

BOW FIDDLE RANCH

1,050 ACRES | ALBANY COUNTY, WYOMING

OVERVIEW

LAND

IMPROVEMENTS

RECREATION

AGRICULTURE

REGION

LOCATION

MAPPING

OVERVIEW

WELCOME TO BOW FIDDLE RANCH

QUICK FACTS

1,050 Acres

2 Homes

3 Outbuildings

Horse

Hunting

Ranch

Recreational

Waterfront

There's a quiet understanding you get when standing in the Centennial Valley — a feeling that this place has been providing for people and wildlife long before we arrived and will continue to do so long after we're gone. Bow Fiddle Ranch stretches across 1,050± acres here, with 1.5 miles of the Little Laramie River flowing cold and steady, born of mountain snowmelt high above.

LAND

At 7,600 feet, the river is unhurried but strong, winding through cottonwood bottoms and willow banks as if it knows exactly what it's here to do — shelter trout, water the meadows, and give those who stand at its edge a reason to pause. You see it in the deep runs, the shaded pools, the cut banks — each a small reminder that good things can be both quiet and enduring. Around the river, the pastures and sub-irrigated meadows offer seasonal forage for livestock and cover for wildlife, not because someone told them to, but because that's the way it's always been. In this way, the land seems to understand its role: to sustain, to protect, and to give generously without asking for much in return.

IMPROVEMENTS

The main ranch house, first raised in the early 1900s, now wears the updates of modern living without losing its old soul. Three bedrooms and two baths, a detached garage — enough to welcome family or guests with the ease that comes from knowing you’ve got a place to return to. The manager’s or guest house, older still and dating back to the late 1800s, sits closer to the river. Its two bedrooms and one bath speak of simpler days, and its location near the heart of the operation makes it more than just a home — it’s a watchful post over the work and water that keep this ranch alive. The historic barn, once a tool of necessity, has been restored into a space where people gather. Weddings, retreats, reunions — moments that remind us life isn’t only about the work we do but also about the people we do it with. Around these, the ranch infrastructure stands ready: split-rail and barbed-wire fencing, working corrals, a newer shop and garage, and the outbuildings that quietly keep the operation steady year after year.

RECREATION

The Little Laramie River is the kind of water that makes you slow down, whether you intend to or not. Recognized as one of the premier trout fisheries in the West, it offers a rare blend of beauty, solitude, and productivity. Its cold, clear flows, fed by mountain snowmelt, support strong populations of wild brown and rainbow trout, with many exceeding 16 inches and the potential for true trophy-class fish. Deep runs, shaded pools, and well-formed riffles provide ideal holding water throughout the season, allowing anglers to work a variety of approaches — from drifting nymphs through pocket water to casting dries along undercut banks. This is the sort of river where the next cast could produce the fish you'll talk about for years, and where even an average day is something most anglers only dream about.

Beyond the river, the ranch's setting opens into the Medicine Bow National Forest and Sheep Mountain, country that holds a large elk herd offering genuine opportunities for bulls right on the property. Mule deer, whitetail, pronghorn, moose, and black bear share this landscape, making each outing into the hills an encounter with wild Wyoming. In the warmer months, miles of public land invite hiking, horseback riding, and ATV exploration through varied alpine and valley terrain. When winter arrives, the area shifts into a snow-covered playground for snowmobiling, cross-country skiing, and downhill skiing at Snowy Range Ski Area, just minutes from the ranch. No matter the season, the land and water here keep offering reasons to step outside.

AGRICULTURE

There's a deep satisfaction in watching cattle thrive on grass you've tended, knowing the same cycles have played out here for generations. Bow Fiddle Ranch has long been a summer grazing ground, capable of supporting herds that stay strong through the season. Sub-irrigated pastures keep the forage rich, while the fencing, laid out with thought and care, makes it easier to move and manage the herd without fighting the land. The roads crisscrossing the ranch and the sturdy working facilities aren't just conveniences — they're the tools that let you work with the seasons instead of against them. The cattle don't know it, but they're part of something steady, something proven. And that's a rare thing to say these days.

REGION & CLIMATE

The Centennial Valley is more than a backdrop — it's part of the story. Known for its open views and deep ranching roots, this place carries a kind of heritage you can feel. Old homesteads still stand, weathered but upright, speaking to the grit it took to make a living here. But it's not all history — the same mountains that tested the first settlers now offer a draw for anglers, hunters, hikers, and those who just want to breathe air that smells of pine and sage. Being this close to the Medicine Bow National Forest and the Snowy Range means there's always something to do, always a trail to follow or a ridge to climb. It's a place that's still honest with itself — no need to pretend it's anything other than what it is.

FEATURES

- Cattle/Ranch
- Fishing
- Hunting - Big Game
- Stream/River
- Water Access

LOCATION

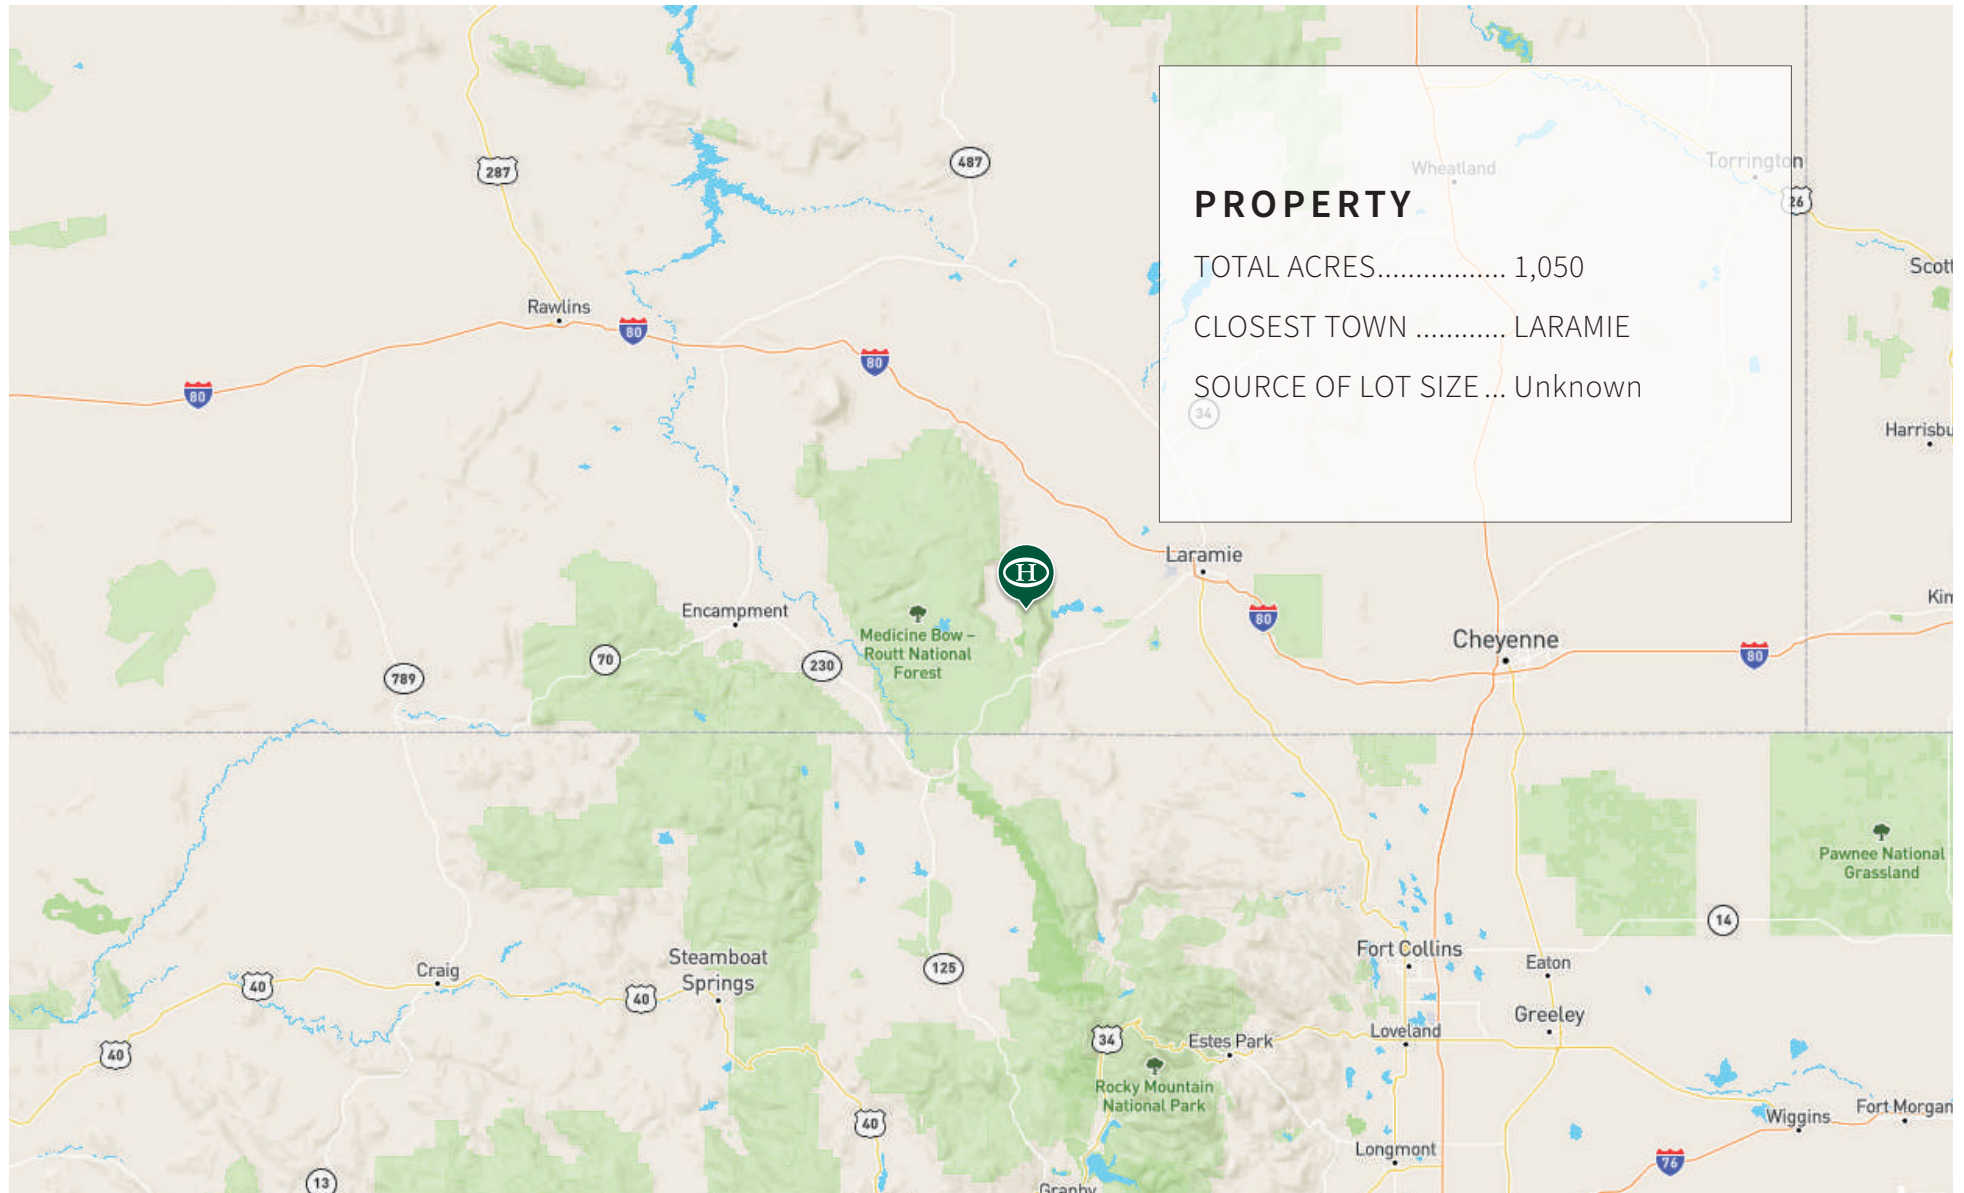

Bow Fiddle Ranch sits just twenty minutes from Laramie, close enough to have everything you need — groceries, medical care, the University of Wyoming’s games and performances — but far enough that the noise stays where it belongs. The Laramie Regional Airport offers daily flights to Denver, and if you need the reach of a major hub, Denver International is about two and a half hours away. The town of Centennial lies just to the west, a small but welcoming stop on the way to the mountains. It’s the kind of place where you can grab a meal, swap stories with someone you just met, and feel like you’ve known them longer.

MAPPING

HAYDEN OUTDOORS
REAL ESTATE

Exclusively Presented By:

Dax Hayden

Managing Partner, Licensed in CO, KS, NE, NM, OK & WY
303.619.6774 | Dax@HaydenOutdoors.com

www.HaydenOutdoors.com